- [ ] Open your History settings. On the web, go to gemini.google.com and click Settings and help, then History.
- [ ] Check the two training boxes. Look for "Chat content including text and uploads" and the audio and Gemini Live setting; they're off by default, so leave them unticked if you don't want your chats used for training.
- [ ] Decide whether to keep History on. With training off, keeping History on gives you a searchable record; turning it off still leaves chats with Google for around two months.
- [ ] Set your auto-delete period. Google's default is 18 months; you can change it to 3 months, 36 months or no auto-delete.
- [ ] Keep sensitive details out. Don't type passwords, health details or client information into Gemini, since chats can be kept and reviewed even with History off.
- [ ] Think before sending feedback. Sending feedback gives Google up to the last 24 hours of your Gemini chats along with it.
- [ ] Ask your administrator about work accounts. If you use Gemini with a work or school account, your Google Workspace administrator controls its History settings.
