- ☐ Find the business name in your account. In Google Ads, open Assets under the Campaigns menu for Search campaigns. For Performance Max, open the campaign, then Campaign settings, then Brand guidelines.
 - ☐ Compare it with your domain and verified name. Your verified name is on the Account page under Admin, then Policy. Note any ad where the business name matches neither.
 - ☐ Test yourself against the three conditions. The name is your recognised name or brand, you have a direct relationship with the domain owner that Google can verify (it hasn't said how), and your products or services are offered directly on that domain.
 - ☐ Check whether you're in an excluded group. Third-party resellers, independent booking intermediaries, affiliate distributors and secondary sellers don't qualify under the October change.
 - ☐ Remove standalone brand names you only resell. A brand you resell can't be your business name on its own. If you are an authorised reseller or dealer, add qualifying language, as in Google's example "Acme of San Antonio".
 - ☐ Ask your agency what it has set. If someone else manages the account, ask which business name each campaign uses and whether it matches your domain or verified name.
 - ☐ Act on any policy warning by its deadline. Google gives at least seven days before a suspension. Edit the ad or asset so it complies, appeal the decision from the account, or remove the ad.
